Egyptians negotiating in New York

ALL READY FOR THE INVASION

CANADA ASSURES THANT OF SUPPORT

(Ottawa, Exclusive to the Canadian Jewish News)

Following the visit to the Canadian capital by the United Nations Secretary General U Thant, The Canadian Jewish News was authorized by a spokesman for the Department for External Affairs to publish the following information:

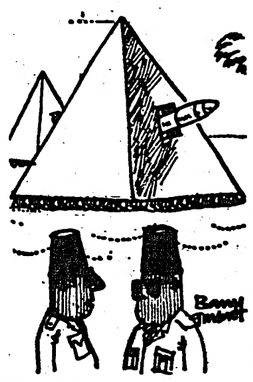
"The Canadian government has naturally welcomed the acceptance by Israel, Jordan and the United Arab Republic of the United States' proposals for a ceasefire and the resumption of talks under the aegis of Ambassador Jarring."

"We earnestly hope that these talks will proceed on the basis of willingness by the parties to implement fully Security Resolution 242 on November 22, 1967."

"We will give the fullest consideration to any opportunity which may arise for Canada to participate constructively with the agreement of the parties in the efforts now being made to achieve peace in the Middle East, whether through increased Canadian participation resulting from an expansion of existing United Nations troops supervising machinery, or and by participation in a new international body which might come into being, or in any other manner open to us."



"I didn't see anything move, did you?"

New taxes are interim measure

Tel Aviv, (JCNS). - There are considerable doubts in economic circles here about the new taxes announced this week by Pinchas Sapir, the Finance Minister.

These circles see his economic measures as only an interim measure which will lead ultimately to devaluation as advocated by professors of economics since April.

There is no question that more money will have to be found to meet the ever-increasing defense burden and that there is too much purchasing power floating around which will have to be syphoned off in order to reduce non-essential imports.

But the virtually non-selective across the board imposition of a 20 per cent import levy will drive up the cost of all articles, whether luxury or otherwise, while the abolition of subsidies on such basic items as eggs and milk will hit the lowest-paid workers hardest.

By Tuesday eggs and milk had already risen between 15 and 20 per cent in price.

The Finance Minister claimed that he had reserved the right when negotiating his "package deal" agreement on wages and prices earlier this year with the unions to increase direct or indirect taxation should the military situation demand it, without this entailing the right to further wage increases.

But, even if the package deal is preserved de jure, it is hard to see how, in the present situation of over-employment, the employers will resist pressures for increases on the part of the sorely needed workers.

London reports Reds massing arms at Canal

by the CJN diplomatic editor

The first contacts under U.N. auspices between Israel and its Arab neighbours are reported to have taken place in New York. However, at East River diplomatic experts declare that the most important events this week relating to the Middle East situation were:

● The statement in Jerusalem Sunday night by Prime Minister Golda Meir in which she spoke of the indirect talks through Ambassador Jarring as "the so-called peace negotiations". (Israel still maintains that without substantial discussions on the Foreign Ministers level there will be no progress towards an understanding).

● In Cairo, official sources declared that King Hussein of Jordan and Egypt's President Nasser agreed that they should "protect the Palestinian Resistance". (Such a decision is considered a provocation by Jerusalem because it is an endorsement of the terrorists during the present ceasefire period).

● The correspondent of the London Sunday Telegraph published a dispatch, passed by the Egyptian censor in Cairo, in which he reports that Russia is stepping up military supplies to Egypt despite the 90 day ceasefire period".

The correspondent, John Bulloch, wires from Cairo that he himself observed "a battery of new SAM-2 missile launchers drive through Cairo on its way to the Canal Zone". These missiles, says Bulloch, were hauled by the latest heavy Soviet armored tractors.

● Also, reports the Sunday Telegraph, ground-to-air missiles, radar directing equipment and heavy artillery are all pouring in into Alexandria. "A train load of SAM-3 missile parts arrived Saturday night in Cairo with spares sufficient for hundred of these weapons, the most sophisticated the Russians brought to Egypt," the reporter says.

"It is clear that the amount of Russian equipment being delivered to Egypt is on the increase".

● According to the Sunday Telegraph, these new arms would give the Egyptians the opportunity to stage a crossing of the Canal while controlling the skies over the Israeli-occupied Sinai side of the Canal.

Ten thousand Russian officers and technicians stand by to help the Egyptians.

This is the situation in the Middle East. All these reports are confirmed by diplomats stationed at the United Nations. They say that should the present negotiations fail, the Egyptians would proceed immediately to a Canal crossing.

SECRET DIPLOMACY IN OTTAWA

The smiling face of the Burmese diplomat U Thant who now runs the political circus at East River known as the United Nations – following his talks with Canada's External Affairs Minister Sharp – will raise many questions.

First, it seems, that this is U Thant's first smile in public for many years. Why is he that happy? U Thant is the same official who had ordered the withdrawal of the United Nations peace keeping forces from Egypt when Nasser was readying for what became later the Six Day War.

Is it true that U Thant, during his visit to the Canadian capital, had in his pocket the complete surrender terms for the Jewish state, including that of stationing a new United Nations army?

********

In his talks with journalists in Ottawa U Thant did not forget to criticize Israel for its refusal prior to the Six Day War to admit United Nations observers and United Nations soldiers into its territory. Thus a second question superimposes itself: why did the Secretary General of the United Nations at this moment find it opportune and relevant to attack Israel's 1967 position, the position taken by a sovereign state refusing any occupation of its territory?

From what transpired in Ottawa this week, and from what we beheld on U Thant's smiling face, it is evident that the Burmese diplomat exploited this opportunity, in a friendly atmosphere, to defend his policy in the spring of 1967, the policy of recalling in haste all United Nations guards in order to please Nasser and ignoring the closing of international waterways for the Jewish state.

U Thant received assurances from Canada's Secretary for External Affairs that, in case of a new peace arrangement in the Middle East, Ottawa would participate in peace keeping operations at the borders? In order to make this new arrangement more palatable to those who remember U Thant's role – and who were shocked recently by the U.N. Secretary General's deliberate omission from Israel's reply to Secretary Rogers of Jerusalem's terms – he said, still smiling:

This time the United Nations forces would not be under the orders of the Secretary General of the United Nations but of the Security Council.

Would this mean, in plain North American English, that Russian forces, on the strength of USSR's permanent membership in the Security Council, would be participating in the peace keeping operations, in a new occupation of the Land of Israel? For the first time, after 22 years, foreign armies, owing allegiance to Moscow, Paris, London and Washington – plus the traditional non-permanent members of the Security Council, most of them out-spoken enemies of the Jewish State – would be controlling the destiny of the Land of Israel. Israel would be completely helpless, with "guarantees" similar to those that Czechoslovakia, of blessed memory, had received after the Munich Agreement and its subsequent withdrawal from the Sudetenland. Did Mr. Sharp, when he promised U Thant to participate in such peace-keeping operations, call this situation to his attention.

********

Israel, of course, is on guard. Golda Meir is determined to pursue peace. But Israel is not as weak yet to be cut up, served readymade for Russia's imperialist interests in the Middle East.

********

Toward the end of the Ottawa talks it was stated that Canada may play a role in peace-keeping operations and in the settlement of the Middle East conflict in general. What role?

It seems we have left the tunnel of secret negotiations pertaining to the Middle East. We are marching in full daylight. So why not openly state what Canada's commitment is?

Many Canadians, Jews and non-Jews, know by now that the destiny of Israel is very relevant to the future of the free world although it may affect first the survival of the Jewish people.

Commentary

BY M. J. NURENBERGER

Conspiracy continues

If there were any doubt as to the interests behind the campaign to have Israel withdraw from all territories conquered during the Six-Day-War, J.W. Fulbright will convince the non-believer. For years the chairman of the United States Senate Foreign Relations Committee has been the leading opponent of American support of the State of Israel. For years he has conducted a one-man lobby in Washington to impress upon Americans the idea that the defense of Israel is irrelevant to the interests of the United States and its international position. In fact, this is the same Fulbright who has been propagating consistently a neo-isolationism, a drive supported throughout the world by all those who would like to see the end of the power of the United States. It is a policy of an ostrich burying its political head in the sand of "neutrality."

Suddenly Mr. Fulbright astonished the American people: his suggestion featured on the front pages of all American newspapers is that Israel's existence should be "guaranteed" by the United States through a mutual defense treaty. But – there is a condition: Israel must retreat to its pre '67 borders; Jerusalem should be internationalized; the United Nations should "guarantee" Israel's continuity prior to American endorsement.

Senator Fulbright conveniently forgets that during the first two weeks of the Middle East ceasefire, Russia and Egypt exploited the interruption in Israel's Suez attacks to consolidate military positions along the Canal. The New York Times, an enthusiastic proponent of the ceasefire, editorially alarmed Washington: it detected a "Near-Disaster" in the area. Russia denied of course that such moves have been made at the ceasefire line. A spokesman for Nasser declared that the missiles have been brought forward so that the world should realize the Soviet Union will not allow a new Arab defeat by Israel. The same spokesman said it is expected that Washington would remain "neutral."

These two statements by Cairo, a demand that Washington remain neutral while Moscow builds up a new front against the Jewish state, plus Fulbright's support for Nasser's demands must induce all of us to ponder upon the meaning of the present conspiracy. Is it exaggerated to say it looks like a new Munich? The New York Times openly stated: "Israel understandably now fears American "peace at any price" tactics . . . a return to pre-1967 conditions that brought war would be disastrous".

Of course, there is one point which we tend to forget: Israel knows the meaning of Munich; it learned history from bitter experience. It refuses to accept unconditional surrender to Moscow.

The government of Jerusalem has demonstrated beyond any doubt its desire to negotiate peace. But those who believe that peace could be obtained through the enslavement of that country will be surprised to discover that the Jewish state will pursue peace but will reject surrender.

Aid Bethlehem business

Jerusalem, (JCNS). - Joseph Sapir, the Minister of Trade and Industry, has promised Bethlehem businessmen the assistance of his Ministry to finance the purchase of production equipment and to find markets for local produce.

Visiting the town last week at the invitation of the local chamber of commerce, Mr. Sapir said the Government would welcome and encourage local initiative in establishing new plants. It was also interested in raising the standard of living of the inhabitants.

A delegation of the chamber of commerce asked the Minister particularly for assistance to small firms and for help in securing import licences.

Launch Ashdot Drive

$38,000 was pledged at a reception which took place at Toronto's Town House, Tuesday evening, to mark the opening of the campaign in aid of Kibbutz Ashdot Yaacov.

Host of the evening was Alexander E. Grossman, chairman of the Ashdot Yaacov Committee, while Avraham Shafir, representative of the Jewish Agency, spoke of the many years he spent working in Ashdot Yaacov.

It is expected that the goal of $250,000 which the Committee has pledged in aid of the kibbutz will be fully realized.

5 more arrested in Russia

London, (JCNS). - Five more Jews, at least one of them holding a permit to emigrate to Israel, have been arrested by the Soviet authorities. Three of the prisoners were signatories to appeals published in the West demanding the right to settle in Israel, the JCNS Foreign Staff reports.

Alexander Galperin, a bachelor aged 24, from Kishinev, was arrested on July 24; Semyon Burshtein, aged 53, from Sukhomi, on the Black Sea, the father of five children, was arrested on August 4, as were Arkady Shpilberg, a 32-year-old Riga engineer, married with one daughter, and Boris Maftzer, aged 23, married, from Riga. Hillel Shur, a 34-year-old Leningrad engineer, who is married, was arrested on August 5.

TORONTO SYNAGOGUES AND ORGANIZATIONS

DINNER-RECEPTION IN HONOR OF ISRAEL FINANCE MINISTER

Ray D. Wolfe, Canadian Jewish leader back from Israel after top-level meetings with government leaders, will be host on his return at a Reception and Dinner at his home on Thursday, September 17th, in honor of Israeli Finance Minister of the State of Israel, Pinhas Sapir, and Ephraim Evron, Israel's Ambassador to Canada. Mr. Sapir is flying to the U.S. in mid-September for special meetings in Washington, to be followed by talks in Ottawa with Canada's Minister for Industry, Trade and Commerce.

"The significance of Mr. Sapir's special visit to Toronto following those meetings underscores the importance the Finance Minister places on our community's leadership in the intensified worldwide Israel Bond efforts now going on," Mr. Wolfe stated. "With the international negotiations now underway, these Israel Bond loan funds are more crucial than ever, in order to provide Israel with the economic support to continue her struggle to survive and to realize the hopes for peace. Mr. Sapir has expressed to me the high priority he has given to meeting with leaders of Toronto Jewry, which is the only community he will be visiting other than Washington and Ottawa. We are doubly honored that His Excellency Ephraim Evron, Israel's Ambassador to Canada, will be with us in Toronto on this occasion. Toronto Jewry can well be proud of the status we have attained in the highest circles, because of our outstanding record in the annual Israel Bond campaigns," Mr. Wolfe commented.

TO ADDRESS TORONTO BOND MEETING.-Israeli Finance Minister Pinhas Sapir.

A leading statesman since the establishment of the State of Israel, Pinhas Sapir's current post as Finance Minister is second only to that of the Prime Minister in Knesset rank. His career has been marked by outstanding accomplishments in the fields of water development, farm settlement, defense and finance. During the War of Liberation, he performed decisive service to Israel's cause by organizing fortifications, housing and transportation for the defense forces. Later he undertook a special mission for the purchase of arms which were of crucial importance in turning the tide of the battle in Israel's favor.

A key architect of Israel's economic strategy, Pinhas Sapir has credited the nearly billion-and-a-half dollars in Israel Bonds sold over the past twenty years, with turning Israel on the road to becoming a modern social and economic nation, which would otherwise have remained a backward country, unable to cope with its problems.

"In the future the role of the Israel Bond Organization will be even greater," he stated at a recent conference. "All our development plans are limited today by the lack of investment capital to provide the basic services needed in the economy. Israel Bonds can help solve this problem."

FARBAND

The second general meeting of the newly formed Netzah Branch 557 of the Farband Labor Zionist Order, Toronto will take place on September 2, 8:p.m. at 14 Viewmount Avenue.

New members are invited. This is a co-ed group: age 18 to 28.

SOVIET PRISONER TELLS OF AGED JEW'S PLIGHT

London, (JCNS). - An aged Moscow Jew, Solomon Borisovich Dolnik, who was sentenced by a Moscow city court to an undisclosed period of imprisonment in 1967 on charges of spying for Israel, is being hounded in a Soviet prison camp by a weird alliance of fellow-prisoners, the JCNS Foreign Staff reports.

This is revealed in the course of an open letter from a political prisoner in the same camp which has now reached the Western world. The contents of the letter have been made available to the JCNS by reliable sources.

CAMP 17

The writer is Alexander Petrov-Agatov, who was sentenced to seven years' imprisonment in January, 1969, having already spent more than 20 years in prison during Stalin's time and since. A writer of lyrics, Petrov-Agatov sent his letter at the end of last year from "Camp No 17", which is in the Potma areas of the Mordovian Autonomous Republic, southeast of Moscow.

The poet, Yuli Daniel, was in the same camp, but was moved -- according to Petrov-Agatov -- because "he remained a singer of freedom and truth"; even in the camp. Other inmates include Yuri Galanskov and Alexander Ginsburg (sentenced to seven and five years' hard labor respectively in January 1968). Daniel is said to have been transferred to the grim Vladimir political prison.

In his reference to Dolnik, Petrov-Agatov writes: "Seventy - seven - year - old Solomon Borisovich Dolnik, subjected to endless mockery. He is hounded by both the KGB men and the fascists who are serving sentences with him, merely because he is a Jew. The interests of the KGB men and the fascists have coincided in this particular case".

The KGB men are presumed to be serving sentences for some dereliction of duty. The reference to "fascists" is taken to mean the aging war criminals who, Petrov-Agatov says, are still serving their sentences in Soviet camps.

"SPYING FOR ISRAEL"

No word has ever been given on the length of Dolnik's sentence. He is a retired geodesic engineer who took to going to the synagogue in Moscow after reaching pensionable age. All that Izvestia said in reporting his sentencing in February, 1967, on charges of spying for Israel was that "the traitor received what he deserved".

The main "evidence" against him -- Izvestia was the only newspaper to report the case in which the names of neither the judge nor counsel were given -- appeared to be his dissemination of Zionist propaganda.

Petrov-Agatov, in the course of his open letter, scorns current Soviet art and literature and accuses the Communist Party of treading in the footsteps of the medieval Inquisition.

LETTERS TO THE GENERAL

London, (JCNS). - Under the title "700 Letters", the Soviet Yiddish monthly, Sovietish Yamland, publishes an article by Lieutenant-General David Dragunsky dealing with what he claims was the large and favorable public response to his anti-Israeli and anti-Zionist statements at a press conference in Moscow on March 4, the JCNS correspondent on East European Affairs reports.

The press conference, attended by other "official Jews", was the highlight of the anti-Zionist spring offensive.

But General Dragunsky's commentary appears to refute his own argument that Soviet Jews en masse agree with his views. With one or two exceptions, the letters of approval which he quotes are from non-Jews, mostly Russians.

One letter, from a Jewish teenager, complains that his parents stubbornly persist in their desire to emigrate -- hardly supporting evidence for the general's main argument which is that Israel has no attraction for Soviet Jews.

"HEALING COMETH FROM THE LORD"

In Toronto, the talk of the town these days is Rabbi Solomon Friedlander, the Lisker Rebbe. His suite at the Windsor Arms Hotel, on St. Thomas, is full of devout followers who ask the Rebbe for advice or just a blessing for a sick member of the family. His reply: "Healing cometh from the Lord."

His Hasidim say he accurately describes people he has never seen, given only their names. He can foretell the future and is visited daily by men and women seeking his counsel.

This is Rabbi Solomon Friedlander, member of an ancient Jewish sect, the Hassidim. For centuries Hassidic rabbis have been mystics and cabalists, believing there are meanings hidden within letters and numbers and the words of the Scriptures.

Rabbi Friedlander came to America from his native Lisk, Hungary, where his forebears had been rabbis for 500 years.

BROUGHT MANY WITH HIM

He brought with him his wife and family and a large number of young people orphaned by the concentration camps. They live now in a building at 2176 Grand Concourse, New York, which was purchased by the Lisker Congregation and which is used as both a synagogue and a home.

The rabbi also brought with him ancient religious articles and books which are centuries old.

"When the anniversary of my grandfather's death was observed in Lisk," he said, "the Hungarian railroad reduced the price of tickets to Lisk, because so many people traveled there for that day." that day."

When the Rabbi's daughter Leah, was married, "there were 500 rabbis at her wedding," her father said. Pictures of the wedding were published in Holland, in the Katholieke Illustratie, which used a Rembrandt painting to show the similarity between the rabbis' hats and beards and the subjects in the paintings.

A HARP OF DAVID TREE

The rabbi's study overlooks a Harp of David tree brought here from Jerusalem. There are those who say that when the congregation sings and dances (typical of Hassidic sects is their love of dancing and music), the tree also can be heard. It sounds like harp music, the followers say.

Rabbi Friedlander is known by a hereditary title: the Lisker Rebbe. He says he does not perform all miracles, but prayers are believed to achieve miraculous results.

The rabbi has a fund of stories which he uses to illustrate his advice. Most of the stories are humorous; all of them are interesting, and many of them come from the writings of ancient sages.

Although the rabbi is a scholar and a mystic, some of his advice is extremely realistic.

Rabbi Solomon Friedlander is seen, in this Toronto Star photo praying over a 16 year old girl in a Toronto hospital. The girl has been pronounced incurable because of a brain damage and Rabbi Friedlander with the Torah scroll in his hand is trying to ease her suffering.

LATTER-DAY MOSES

ASK THE RABBI
a JCNS featurette

Q. Is it correct for Orthodox Jewish couples to have their bedroom furnished with a one-piece double bed only?

A. According to Orthodox Jewish law there must be no physical contact between husband and wife during the "separation" (middah) period so that they are certainly not allowed to sleep in the same bed. Herman Wouk (This Is My God, page 146) puts it succinctly: "Jewish-married couples follow an old rule of alternating abstinence and enjoyment. During twelve days after the menses begin -- or seven days after they cease, whichever period is longer -- wife and husband sleep apart. For this reason twin beds have existed in Jewish homes as long as the religion itself. The main practical result of this is that they rejoin at the time when the wife is most likely to conceive. It is the exact opposite of the rhythm system of birth control. For couples who love each other the separation is a hardship, perhaps the one real hardship in the Hebrew disciplines".

Q. My synagogue has asked that leather shoes should not be worn in synagogue on the Day of Atonement. What is the reason for this?

A. The Mishna (Yoma 8,1) rules that in addition to the prohibition of eating and drinking it is forbidden to wear (leather) shoes on the Day of Atonement in order to practise "affliction" (see Leviticus 16,31), i.e. self-denial. Two further reasons are mentioned in the post-Talmudic literature. Leather shoes are obtained by killing animals and while this is permitted it is not fitting that leather should be worn on the day on which Israel entreats God for compassion. Secondly, the shoes have to be removed when treading on holy ground (see Exodus 3,5 and Joshua 5,15) and the Day of Atonement is especially sacred.

Q. What first-born sons are exempted from "pidyon haben"?

A. Where the father is a Cohen or a Levite or the mother the daughter of a Cohen or a Levite; where the mother had previously had a miscarriage; where the child had had a Caesarean birth.

Q. I find it difficult to keep track of the Hebrew date of my parents' Yahrzeit. Can I not observe the anniversary of the civil date? And if not why not?

A. No, you may not observe the anniversary on any other than the Hebrew date. Why not? Because the observance of Yahrzeit is a Jewish religious obligation and should quite obviously be carried out on the date according to the Jewish calendar. The secretary of your synagogue will be prepared to work out the Hebrew date for you and keep you annually informed of it at the right time.

KEEP SMILING

EVERYTHING HIMSELF

The rabbi ordered a new suit of clothes from Yisroel the tailor. He expected to wear it within two weeks. But the suit wasn't ready.

"Why does it take you so long?" asked the rabbi.

"I don't have it as easy as you," explained Yisroel. "In your discourses you tell us, 'The Gemera helps us out,' 'The Midrash brings,' 'Rashi makes of it.' No one does anything like that for me, and I have to do all the work myself."

WITH DUE RESPECT

Beryl Cohen, the only Jewish inhabitant in a village not far from Warsaw, drove into the big city to make some purchases. Unknowingly Beryl stopped near the central office of the Jewish community, and being afraid to leave his horses alone, he addressed a respectable-looking passerby:

"Reb Yid, will you be good enough and help me out? Take care of my horse while I pay a brief visit to the store across the street."

"You are asking me to mind your horse?" said the stranger indignantly. "Evidently you don't know that I am the manager of the central office of the Jewish community."

"Oh, that?" Beryl queried calmly. "But if I trust you, what do you care?"

Assassins for Canada

EL FATAH SCHOOL

On several occasions The Canadian Jewish News called the attention of public opinion to strange activities of Arab terrorist agents operating in this country. We also pointed out that some extremist groups in Quebec are cooperating closely with agents of Arab terrorist movements. Another problem seems to be, we stated, the diplomatic immunity of a number of "diplomats", representing countries promoting the destruction of Israel.

All these "revolutionaries" had been ignored by the press because, they threatened "only" minorities and "Zionists".

Now there is some awakening, finally. Even a non-political family magazine, such as Weekend, run by many Canadian newspapers as a Saturday supplement, found it opportune to issue a warning. It published a remarkable report, The Politics of Assassination, by a reporter who visited a guerilla camp in Jordan. There, in the Jordanian camp, reports Weekend, Quebeckers "impatient with the unsuccessful bombing tactics of the FLQ", now are studying "the art of selective assassination".

This, they frankly told the Canadian reporter, is their purpose. They have even prepared "the names of the prospective victims in our heads".

There may still be some doubt as to the danger that these would-be-assassins present to Canada. However, before someone is killed, it would be advisable to trace the individuals or the organization that were involved in transporting these murder aspirants to the Jordanian camp.

We know the RCMP has been aware of what is going on in some circles where so-called "Marxist-Leninists" are misleading young men and women into involvement in causes that sound idealistic but actually are those of the political underworld. Thus before it is too late we suggest that some roads leading to certain diplomatic outlets here be explored.

Nonsense plus bigotry

BAD AIMING

In its August issue, Point De Mire, a pro-Separatist Montreal magazine, attacks Nouveau Monde, the French language magazine published under the auspices of The Canadian Jewish News.

According to Point De Mire, Nouveau Monde is a "Liberal" magazine, "serving the interests of the Jews of Montreal and Toronto and " . . . not an independent non-political publication".

Also, Point De Mire states Nouveau Monde has but one purpose: "to provoke in French Quebec an antisemitism that did not exist till now".

It is superfluous to argue this point with Point De Mire; Nouveau Monde never represented itself as anything but a magazine published under Jewish auspices. Are "Jewish interests" in Montreal and Toronto "opposed" to "the interests of Quebec"? Only bigots, endeavouring to build a wall between citizens, would concoct such a theory.

The editorial remarks made by Point De Mire are so obviously antisemitic that they strengthen the opinion expressed quite often by many French Canadians, (including Prime Minister Trudeau), that some Separatist individuals are affected by anti-Jewish prejudices.

In fact, Nouveau Monde was established in order to open a dialogue between French Canadians and the non-French minorities in Quebec.

It is an independent magazine, and will continue to publish opinions representing both trends, the Federalist and the Separatist, despite the nonsense printed by Point De Mire.

COUNTER MOVES ARAB MOVES AND

By YAIR EVRON

The Egyptian acceptance of the American peace initiative and the virulent criticism of it by some other Arab countries, have again brought to the fore the deep divisions existing between the Arab States. These divisions are related not so much to different approaches towards the Arab-Israeli conflict but more to the competition inside the Arab world for positions of power and hegemony.

Apart from the super powers' competition, there are two main coincidental areas of competition and conflict in the present Middle East and another potential one. These are the competition inside the Arab world; the Arab-Israeli conflict and a potential conflict around the Persian Gulf, a conflict in which another Middle Eastern non Arab State, Iran, is involved. All these conflicts interact and affect each other.

Thus, whereas the decision by Egypt and Jordan to accept the Rogers plan was dictated by considerations confined primarily to the context of the Arab-Israeli conflict, the reactions of Syria, Algeria and primarily Iraq, sprang out of a cynical attempt to use this decision to further their interests within the context of inter-Arab competition. But there the similarity between these three countries ends, as each one is manoeuvering with completely different kinds of involvement.

What are the different interests involved? The Egyptian interests are concerned primarily, on the one hand with the way in which the military conflict with Israel has developed and its adverse effects on the Egyptian economy and society, and the tacit fear of still growing Russian involvement and influence over Egypt. Although this involvement strengthened somewhat the Egyptian military position, or at least their self-perception of this position, it is far from being able to secure for constitutes a potential danger for further Egyptian independence.

It could thus be argued that it was not just Russian pressure on Nasser which made him accept the new plan, but also his estimate of Egyptian capabilities and his concern about the potential dangers inherent in Soviet growing involvement in the particular Egyptian-Israeli conflict.

For the present Jordanian regime, the main motivation for its positive response to the American plan lies again in the understanding that the Arab States cannot hope even in their wildest dreams to win a military campaign against Israel. Thus Hashemite Jordan can hope for some solution to her particular problems only by some diplomatic negotiations. But in her case there is an added element, namely, what would be the future of the present regime in case of a continued ever escalating conflict with Israel. Would not the guerrilla organizations at a certain point in the future decide and be able to take over?

That both Sudan and Libya back Egypt, at least for the time being, is not surprising. The military regimes in these countries have staked part of their prestige on a common policy with Egypt. At the same time Colonel Qadafi of Liby is still trying to secure for himself an independent and important role in the Arab world. This he can hope to do only by continuing his close relations with Nasser, while at the same time trying to keep a position of a go-between and an honest broker. The irony of the situation is, of course, that both leaderships must bear in mind the possibility that a real calm between Israel and Egypt might result in the turning of Egyptian ambitions towards their countries. But this is something for the future, and just now they are still backing Nasser.

One of the more interesting developments in the Arab world since the Six-Day War was the gradual process of fragmentation between the Arab East and the Arab West. The three Magreb countries are concentrating more and more on their own domestic problems while trying at the same time to find ways for a meaningful economic and possibly political cooperation among themselves. They have recently conducted a series of meeting discussing their common problems and appear to become more and more detached from the turbulent Arab East. Thus although President Boumedienne immediately after the Six-Day War played for a short time the rather boring Arab game of trying to become the leader of the Arab world by being the most extreme within the context of the Israeli-Arab conflict, since the plot against him at the end of 1967 he has switched back to domestic politics and problems. His opposition to the American plan is certainly inspired by the same motivations which led him immediately after the 1967 war, but the whole context of Algerian policy has changed since then.

Boumedienne is not trying anymore to snatch the leadership of the Arab world, and it appears that he will continue to pursue a "low profile" policy as far as the Arab East is concerned.

Syria is, of course, one of the more experienced Arab States in the game of "I can do it better than you" as far as vocal extremism against Israel is concerned. But she is at the moment in the awkward position of really having to fight it out if she persists in her opposition to any peace initiative. She could perhaps score some propaganda gain by criticising Egypt but might suffer in very real terms. She is after all one of the "front line" countries.

All this serves to explain why Syria, although refusing to accept the new initiative, still refrains from using the same violent language against Egypt that Iraq is using. Indeed, it is Iraq that suddenly emerged in her traditional role of competitor for the leadership of the Arab East against Egypt.

Middle Eastern politics are really terribly traditional and the oldtime dancing comes to live now and again. After all, Egypt and Iraq were involved in this competition for many, many years. But, as the Egyptians were quick to point out, there also was the feeling of insecurity in a regime which keeps trying to find foci for hostility in order to overcome popular dissatisfaction. And there might be two added and interrelated motives there as well: first, the possibility that successful negotiations might force Iraq to pull out her forces from Jordan and thus lose an important position there.

King Hussein has already demanded this pull out. After all, the dreams of uniting Iraq and Jordan and perhaps the whole of the fertile crescent under Iraqi hegemony were dear to different Iraqi regimes, which serves again to show the great continuity in Middle Eastern politics. Second, bringing back the expeditionary forces from Jordan might mean a new coup d'etat against the present regime. It is a well-known feature of Praetorian regimes that the commanders of forces engaged in war (or assumed to be involved in it) tend to try to snatch power for themselves upon returning home.

The propaganda war goes on. What could be the outcome? One should never predict about the Middle East. But if, to take just one possible scenario, peace negotiations do go through, and the present obvious relief of the bulk of the Egyptian population at the new developments does register itself upon the minds of the present Egyptian leadership, then perhaps a tendency towards more "Egyptian nationalism" as against "Arab nationalism" might become more manifest in Egypt.

But this is only one possibility. There are many others. What appears to be quite clear even now is that the Arab West would keep its detachment from the East, and that some further fragmentation in the Arab East is most certainly to happen.

Man Behind the Rogers Plan

JOSEPH SISCO

JCNS EXCLUSIVE

While the Secretary of State, William Rogers, takes the praise -- and the blame -- for the US peace initiative in the Middle East, the drive behind the initiative emanates from Joseph Sisco, the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern Affairs.

There has never been a man in his position so committed to the notion of an Arab-Israeli settlement, nor one who has worked for it with as much zeal and dedication.

His predecessors were conservative, slow-moving, conventional diplomats who knew the Arab world in the same manner as might a professor of Islamic studies. Their objective was stability and preservation of the status quo.

They relied on the foreign service bureaucrats with whom they shared the basic conviction that a softening in Israel's attitude and the political and social modernization of the Arab world would have to precede any possibility of peace -- which they saw as being in the very distant future.

Mrs. Meir and Mr. Sisco, before the Rogers' proposals were enunciated.

Mr. Sisco is an unprofessional professional: fast-talking, fast-moving, aggressive. He would have made the grade as politician or businessman. He has little regard for the foreign service bureaucracy, or its advice.

Among his Arabist experts, he is not popular. Neither Sisco himself nor the two or three men closest to him claim any expertise in Arab affairs. Which is probably just as well, since Mr. Sisco is not the type to accept that because things are the way they are, they must stay that way.

He is genuinely interested in bringing about a basic change in the Middle East situation and, in seeking to do so, can almost write his own "ticket". Mr. Rogers, his immediate superior, is a newcomer to the complexities of the Middle East and does not take an active interest in everyday details.

Mr. Sisco's predecessors were under orders from oldtime professionals, like Acheson, Dulles and Rusk, all of whom held strong views on the Middle East. Mr. Sisco has direct access to the White House and his views on the Middle East carry great weight there.

Among senior Administration officials the belief is held that if Jo Sisco cannot "clean-up the Middle East mess", then nobody can.

"UNDERGROUND" THREAT TO WITHDRAWAL

JCNS EXCLUSIVE

Tel Aviv, (JCNS). - Tahal, short for Tenuat Hitnagdut Linesiga (Anti-Withdrawal Movement), is the name suggested for the movement to oppose, under any circumstances, any withdrawal from the present ceasefire lines.

This movement intends to take all action necessary to prevent any Israeli acceptance of a peace formula involving a compromise on territories and evacuation of some of the Defense Forces.

An extreme example of the attitude of some leaders of this new "Resistance" was a recent declaration by Oved Ben-Ami, the Mayor of Netanya.

He threatened the emergence of a "new underground" to combat the Government's policy in the event of any withdrawal and said that "there will not be enough space for us in Israel's prisons".

PUBLIC COMMITTEE

A Public Committee of about 25 personalities was founded last week to lead and co-ordinate action planned to prevent any Israeli withdrawal from occupied territories.

The Committee will include leaders of the Eretz Israel Movement, headed by Dr. Haim Yahil, the chairman of the Broadcasting Authority and a former director-general of the Foreign Ministry.

Others will include Menachem Begin, the leader of the Gahal Party (the alignment between Herut and the Liberals); Haim Landau, a former Gahal (Herut) Minister; Rabbi M.Z. Neriya and other National Religious Party Knesset Members; Isser Harel, a former Secret Service chief, who is one of Ben-Gurion's four State List Knesset Members.

The Committee will doubtless include at least one Knesset Member from all the parties except the far Left. However, although one Liberal Knesset Member is expected to join, the Liberal Party as such refused last week to do so.

GROWING RIFT

Mr. Begin wanted a composite Gahal to join the Committee, but he was opposed by Yosef Sapir, the former Minister of Commerce and Industry, and other Liberal leaders.

This Liberal refusal is a new indication of the growing rift within the Herut-Liberal block. While generally the Liberals do not favor far-reaching territorial concessions, they are not willing to follow Begin in his uncompromising stand and opposition even to "tactical compromise".

All the parties, except Herut on the Right, which is united in rejecting territorial compromise, and Mapam, the Communists and Haolam Hazeh on the Left, which favor partial or total withdrawal to the pre Six-Day War armistice lines, are divided over the question whether Israel should renounce any territory.

One State List Member, Meir Avizohar, refused to vote against the Government after Golda Meir, the Prime Minister, mentioned the word "withdrawal" in her Knesset speech early this month on the US peace initiative, and he accused his party of giving in to extremism.

In the same vote, several Members of the NRP Party parliamentary group preferred to be absent or abstain in spite of the presence of NRP Ministers in the Cabinet.

There is also support for the ideas of the Greater Israel Movement within some of the Labor Party leadership.

Itzhak Tabenkin, the veteran leader of Achdut Avoda, which merged with Mapai and Rafi in January, 1968, to form the Labor Party, is one of them. He is far from being alone in his opinions.

CONCERN

London, (JCNS). - Anglo-Jewry's concern at the threat to close the Jewish Documentation Center in Vienna has been expressed to the Austrian Government. A delegation from the Board of Deputies called on the Charge d'Affaires at the Austrian Embassy in London to voice the concern of the community and Jewry elsewhere.

The delegation comprised Lord Janner, chairman of the board's foreign affairs committee, and Abraham Marks, the board's secretary.

LETTERS AND OPINIONS

THINK OF PEACE!

Dear Editor;

The series of four articles by Robert Reguly, recently published in the Toronto Star did not reveal anything new but aided the Arab propaganda machine, and added oil to the fire the world is trying to put out.

Passing on one of the University campuses in Toronto, I found a leaflet distributed on behalf of an extremist Arab group referring to the U.S. Mideast Peace Plan as "fraud".

The Arab extremists always are complaining about "the refugees". During the last twenty years 4,500,000 European people were forced out of the Arab countries: some hundreds of thousands of Italians left Libya and Egypt; 1,700,000 French fled Algeria, Tunisia and Morocco. Over 700,000 Jews left Iraq, Yemen, Egypt, Libya and the other Arab countries. Jews who had lived in these countries for countless generations left everything behind. The Arabs took everything. The people left only with the clothes on their backs.

The Arabs had an opportunity to place the 700,000 Arab refugees from Palestine in the homes of the European people who fled the Arab countries. Instead the refugees were put in camps that have cost millions of dollars contributed by the nations of the world. This was the most brutal thing the Arabs did against their own people. Palestine was ever an Arab country. It never had an Arab government. Palestine had been occupied, since the time of Caesar, by Greeks, Romans, English and other nations. The only legal government in Palestine was the Jewish government. The Western World has never understood how the Arab countries, with 85 percent of their people illiterate, millions without jobs, disease and sickness rampant, could spend billions of dollars on ammunition to liquidate a little country like Israel, instead of using the money to build schools, hospitals, homes, and industry for their own people and think of peace once and for all.

SERMON FOR THE WEEK

What I Do Affects All Mankind

See, I set before you this day, blessing and curse (Deuteronomy 11:26).

"You hold the key to the world," said a Rabbi addressing a Bar Mitzvah. "Upon you the future of mankind depends. We read in this week's Sidrah: 'See, I set before you this day, blessing and curse.' It is interesting to note that the verse in Hebrew begins with Re-ay 'See' which is in the singular, and continues with the word lifnekhem 'you' which is in the plural. We may take this to indicate that the wellbeing of the entire community depends upon every individual. One man can exert upon his fellow men a tremendous influence for good or for evil. The course of history has been changed both by Pharaoh and Moses, by Haman and by Mordecai, by Hitler and by Churchill. Wars have often been started and ended by a single individual."

When mankind is judged, we shall learn that the deeds of one man can affect the fate of all mankind. Asah mitzvah ahat ashray sheh-kikhria et atzmo v'khol haolam l'khaf z'khut "He who does one good deed may tip the scale on the side of merit for himself and for all mankind" (Kedushin 40b).

The Talmud also tells us that a man should always say: Bishvili nivra haolam "The world was created for my sake."

If everyone were to feel that his own deeds could determine the fate of mankind, he would live with a sense of greater responsibility for his least act, and the world would be a far better place in which to live.

FROM HEAVEN ON YOUR HEAD, by Dr. S.Z. Kahana, adapted by Rabbi Morris Silverman. By arrangement with Hartmore House, Hartmore House, Hartford, Conn.

KIBBUTZ SEEKS NEW IMAGE

by C. Alpert

Haifa -- Israel's Hebrew press blossomed out this summer with a number of large advertisements in typical American real estate promotion style. At the center of the ad was an attractive photograph of a beautiful bungalow, georgeously landscaped, looking for all the world like what is called a villa in Israel.

But this was no appeal to buy real estate or a new home. The heading read: "The Kibbutz Wants to be Your Home". It was an appeal to Israelis to abandon urban life, with its implied hustle and bustle, taxes and problems, slums and noise and congestion -- for the quiet, secure, comfortable life in a kibbutz.

This is the continuation of a campaign which the kibbutz has been carrying on for some years. Israel's collective settlement, the pride and joy of Zionists everywhere, is facing a problem of slow attrition from the gradual departure of its youth. They are certainly not abandoning the kibbutz in droves, but it is becoming increasingly difficult to keep the boys on the farm after they have seen gay Tel-Aviv, and have spent three years in the army.

Attempts to bring new immigrants to the kibbutz have not been altogether successful. More than 60 kibbutzim maintain Ulpan courses for immigrants, under the auspices of the Jewish Agency, hoping that this exposure to the idyllic life will induce some of the newcomers to remain when the course is completed. From 5 - 8% do stay on, but the drop-out rises thereafter. It is a high price that the kibbutz pays, because the remainder of the Hebrew-studying immigrants are not always the kind of material who contribute to a quiet life. Marijuana - smoking hippies arouse great resentment among kibbutz members who, despite all you may have heard to the contrary, are staunchly conservative.

In its appeal to city dwellers the kibbutz lists the economic and social security advantages of membership. The high cultural and educational standards are emphasized. Opportunities in industry, agriculture and the crafts are available. This year I note a new appeal which I have not seen in previous kibbutz advertising: "The kibbutz respect the will of the individual, and enables you to contribute to your talents and your initiative in accordance with your ability". This certainly sets up a new image for the kibbutz.

Many apply, we are told, but most are turned away because of the severe selectivity. Among the candidates are many "refugees" from problems: broken families; hard-luck individuals who couldn't make a success of anything; psychological cases. The kibbutz wants none of these. Even those chosen must first undergo a trial period before membership is made permanent.

There does not seem to be any mad stampede to the kibbutz. During the period of economic retrenchment which preceded the Six-Day War financial pressures drove many to the farm. Today's inflationary picture of full employment and thriving economy make the kibbutz less of a drawing power. Should the situation change, as many expect it will; if salaries are frozen or reduced simultaneously with sharp rise in taxes, increase in unemployment and general austerity; the kibbutz may again have many more candidates. Perhaps the present ads are preparing for that day.

A distinguished Israeli sociologist, Dr. Rivka Bar-Yosef, had this acute observation to make on the kibbutz very recently. The kibbutz is an Israeli showpiece of which everyone here is proud, she said. Israelis like to boast about this sociological innovation, but their pride in it is purely vicarious. The great majority usually hasten to add that it is a great place -- a wonderful place -- but not for me, of course.

A scene from the play "Beyond the Ocean" performed at the prestigious Satire Theater of Moscow by the touring Yiddish theatrical troupe led by Veniamin Shvartser, who can be seen in the center of this photo. Story tells of the plight of a Jewish family emigrating from Russia to the United States in 1900. Many in the audience laughed about how easy it was then to travel between Russia and the U.S.

* Actor singer Sammy Davis Jr., in Las Vegas for a TV series called Name of the Game, was hospitalized last week end for a illness listed as "respiratory infection". The durable and versatile Sammy however is expected to be released in a few days.

* Singer Tom Jones, in Los Angeles for several singing engagements, was also taken to hospital for a "mild case of gastritis". The popular star of his own TV show is expected to be released in a few days.

* Actor Peter Sellers, 44, was married in London to Miranda Quarry the 23 year old daughter of a British peer. The bride held her two Pekinese dogs on a leash during the short (10 minutes) marriage ceremony. Sellers is at his third wedding. He was previously married to Anne Howe and Britt Eklund.

* Clair Bloom, the actress with a classic face, will return to the Broadway stage after an absence of 11 years. Her repertoire will consist of two Ibsen plays, a Doll's House and Hedda Gabler. Both works will be produced by her husband, and perhaps this is why she can easily make this big return to Broadway...

* The Gabor crowd is on a losing streak again. After collecting 12 husbands (and losing them) the Zsa Zsa, Eva and Magda sisters are now rapidly losing their long collection of jewlery, patiently collected through the years. Last week Zsa Zsa lost more than $500,000 worth of gems to thieves working in the luxurious Waldorf Towers and a few days after this theft the mother of the three sisters was almost robbed of her jewels but this time an alert policeman foiled the would-be robber.

Jewish magazine in Afrikaan

Johannesburg, (JCNS). - A quarterly magazine in Afrikaans, entitled Buurman (Neighbor) is to be published by the South African Jewish Board of Deputies.

Its object is "to provide Afrikaans readers with an insight into Jewish life and culture" and to give "Jews an understanding and appreciation of the Afrikaans-speaking people".

Contributors will include Mr. Justice J. F. Marais, a confirmed Zionist, who recently returned from a visit to Israel, and Mr. J. Kruger, a former editor of Die Transvaler, the Nationalist Party newspaper.

TORONTO AFTER DARK

* From Aug. 25 to 29 the Ontario Youtheatre, a company of 84 (count them!) presents a musical drama called Babel that has been highly recommended by the critics. The performances are given at the Theater, St. Lawrence Center, Front and Scott Sts.

* Ray Hutchinson is appearing nightly with the Confederation Band at the Savarin, Bay and Adelaide. Show time from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.

* That happy Jamaican troupe known as Byron Lee and the Dragonaires, is appearing every night at the Seaway Beverley Hills Motor Hotel. Top entertainment, direct from the West Indies.

* A change of pace is to remain home one night this week and watch and enjoy a complete opera on your TV screen. Watch for Verdi's La Traviata to be telecast on Channel 11 with the celebrated soprano Anna Moffo in the title role.

* Every night there is a different show at the CNE Grandstand. Among the other stars coming to the CNE there's also the very funny Mr. Red Skelton.

* If you plan to attend a performance of Hair, the controversial show playing since January at the Royal Alexandra Theater, you'll miss actress Gail Garnett in the role of Sheila. Miss Garnett has packed up and gone. She is on the verge of becoming a screenplay writer. Her first work (one of fantasy, it goes without saying) will be titled "The Mannequin".

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

by Dr. Arnold Ages

A TWISTED MIND FOR A TWISTED ROAD

THE TWISTED ROAD TO AUSCHWITZ 1933-1939. By Karl A. Schleunes. University of Illinois Press. 279 pp.

Contrary to what the title of this book suggests, the subject of Professor Karl Schleunes' inquiry is not the Nazi concentration camp system.

It is rather a meticulously researched analysis of the step by step procedure which enabled Hitler and his cronies to drive the Jews out of Germany and eventually to destroy not only the German Jewish community but the European one as well.

In his introductory section Schleunes essays a sketch of the background of Jewish-German relations before the Second World War.

From the vantage point of the 1970's we read with utter amazement of the esteem which German Jews held for their "Fatherland".

"Despite the universal contrary prejudice I venture to assert," wrote Hermann Cohen, the renowned Kantian philosopher, "that in Germany equal rights for Jews have deeper roots than anywhere else."

"And our limited Jewish rights in Germany," he continued, "are of higher value for religious survival than the apparently absolute equal rights of Jews abroad."

But even while Cohen was making this happy judgement about German Jewry, the stage was being set for the grusome fate that was to befall all Jews in Europe.

Schleunes finished several theories to explain the resurgence of antisemitism after the First World War.

In addition to the professional antisemites, including politicians and journalists, there was a considerable group of German war veterans who eagerly adopted anti-Jewish attitudes.

When they returned from the battlefields in 1918 they found the German countryside relatively untouched by war. German soldiers came back to their village hamlets and found that not even a blade of grass had been affected.

This phenomenon reinforced in them the idea that perhaps Germany hadn't really lost the war -- that perhaps it had been betrayed.

And who was the perfect scapegoat on which to affix the blame for Germany's ignominious surrender?

As in the past, the Jews were assigned the necessary guilt.

At the same time a number of other forces were converging in German life, all to the detriment of the Jewish community. One was the spread of theories, like those enunciated by Werner Sombart, which saw in the restless spirit of the Jews the motive force in the development of a market economy.

Sombart himself was not antisemitic but his convenient theory was soon espoused by the Nazis for their own satanic ends.

When the Nazis took power they began their systematic attempt to remove Jews from all phases of German life.

But as Schleunes observes, many of their anti-Jewish measures resulted in widespread disruption of Aryan life as well.

It was relatively easy for the Nazis to close down small Jewish stores, but taking on the department store complexes was another matter. Closing them down also meant depriving thousands of "good" Germans of a job.

One of the outstanding parts of Schleunes' treatise is the section dealing with the debates surrounding the promulgation of the infamous Nurenberg laws.

The author shows that they were not created over night but were the cause of intense polemic, especially over the definition of who was to be considered a Jew.

One of the surprising features in this regard is Schleunes' kind words the onetime economics minister, Hialmar Schacht, the man who helped Hitler consolidate his economy and produce an efficient war machine.

Schleunes suggests on several occasions that Schacht did a great deal to protect Jewish financial investments in Germany in order to prevent chaos.

The book also contains an intriguing section on Eichmann, describing his contact with Haganah men in the late thirties.

This was during the period when Eichmann was considering various schemes to effect the emigration of large numbers of German Jews.

Eichmann informed his superiors that he carried on these negotiations, not to assist the Jews in building up their state but as a stratagem to be dangled in front of Haganah men in order to obtain information about alleged assassinations of German leaders that world Jewry was supposed to be planning.

The author also provides some interesting materials about arrangements that were eventually worked out between Nazi officials and Jews who went to Palestine.

This included the Haavara plan by which German Jews, upon departing for Palestine, deposited their assets in Sperrkonto accounts which remained in Germany. When they arrived in Palestine the Haavara trust company paid the new settlers 50% of their deposit assets and used the other half to pay for German goods.

In reading this excellent book one struck by the refusal of German Jews in the thirties to grasp what was happening to them.

Hindsight, of course, is easy. Yet how does one react to the fact that at every step German Jews (Zionists excepted) attempted to reach a modus vivendi with the Third Reich?

Even so, such a notable person as Hans Joachim Schoeps, tried to get an interview with Hitler in order to reach some kind of concordat with the Nazi powers.

THE OUTCASTS

The place: Munich airport.

The time: 1970, a.m. We are returning home from culture-soaked Europe by a plane not of our national airline.

"Are these your suitcases?" the blonde clerk asks while checking our upside-down Israeli passports. "Didn't anyone ask you to take a parcel along?"

No, we assure you, no one. As a matter of fact, we had read only two days ago about the marvellous farce at Athens Airport. It all looks so simple: you simply walk into the cockpit and announce: hello, I've got a handgrenade in my pocket, put me through to the President of the State, hi, hand over the murderers, the Fort Knox treasury and shishkebab for two. I repeat, I've got a handgrenade in my pocket...

We take a look around, the flight is fully booked. In the queue to the blond clerk a young hippie with a black moustache and suspicious sunglasses is pushing and shoving. Is he our broadcaster? Our eyes also roam the place in search of the counterpoint: "who is our Rahamim?" the Israeli passengers ask, but the little woman says no, only El Al is dispensing that comfort.

Our plane is not listed on the illuminated flight schedule until the very last moment. Naturally, we are moved to the farthest end of the departure lobby, to the Troubles Department. Before long, German police arrive, armed with submachine guns, and survey us with basilisk eyes. All around us, people move away from us and watch the Lod refugees with quiet and subdued scorn. As for ourselves, we shrink to the limits of credibility, after all, it is rather unpleasant that alone among the world's peoples, we should be the eternal troublemakers. The French fly quietly, the Poles fly quietly, the Arabs fly quietly, only the Jews turn all airports topsy-turvy. An arrogant, aggressive race, to quote someone.

At the entrance to a cramped solitary confinement cell at the end of the hall, a police sergeant addresses us:

"Go in by couples and take all your luggage along..."

Behind the door, a close cross-examination is taking place. Every couple carries out a private identification parade among its suitcases and submits for inspection even its embarrassingly empty purses. The detectives plunge their arms right to their shoulders into the luggage and sometimes emerge with soiled stockings clinging to their fingers. All metal objects are carefully scrutinized, every box is cautiously opened. The team does not openly blame us for this chicanery, but their icy stares are eloquent: "gypsies, that's what you are."

The Wandering Jew goes home: standing there, wedged in by the growing mountains of our upended belongings, with the kids' toys in one hand and a bunch of keys in the other, we are gripped by the mute fear that next thing we know we'll be arrested and moved to the central prison for some advanced grilling. Who will stand us bail?

"Stop!" a plainclothesman barks behind us. "What's that in your hand sir?"

He releases me. The wife is fighting the sergeant and the suitcase locks. It all takes ages, from the outside dozens of impatient passengers are pounding on the door. Noise, nerves, shouting in short: Israelis.

Our glance sweeps towards the center of the plush lobby. Near the exit to the Arab Airline plane, cultured gentlemen and their ladies are sitting or walking in comfort. They enjoy their cigars, chat pleasantly, they haven't got a worry in the world because they are citizens of civilized countries in the Mediterranean area, countries which give no trouble to airport managers. They are living proof that even a nation fighting a war can maintain its dignity. In Munich, the Arabs represent Europe and we the darkest Levant. They can even send home parcels while for us a ban is in force with no end in sight. Everybody knows that those Israelis are always causing trouble.

We take a few steps towards the group waiting for the Cairo flight to be called. It is literally touching how bucolically things are managed there, to what extent our neighbors trust us regarding international travel arrangements. The Arabs know they can have full confidence in us, that we shall never lower ourselves to their level, that we are gentlemen. Their trust pays off: they roam the world as gentlemen, while we are harassed like a flock fo gypsies beset by a posse of vigilantes.

As a matter of fact, why haven't we got a terror group of our own?

Why must we be the only ones who keep asking: how long will this go on? Why haven't we got a national movement equipped with handgrenades, Kalatchnikov guns and recoilless rifles, whom the authorities cannot curb? "This is the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Samaria and Judea, we have taken command of the plane, over." Where is the Jewish Entity? If we only had set up a number of such prestigious institutions, we could now have replied to Mr. Rogers without batting an eyelid: we accept the armistice unconditionally, but as for the terrorists, it's all in Allah's hands.

A dream, so help us.

An armoured bus ferries us culprits to the isolated plane pasturing at the deserted edge of the field. Three jeeploads of armed cops travel along. In the succinct words of our master and teacher Dr. Habash: the blowing up of a Jewish plane abroad is more effective publicitywise than a massacre in Jerusalem. The doctor is right. We climb the gangway in a sombre mood.

At the other end of the airfield, the proud eagle of the United Arab Republic takes off elegantly. He flies majestically and safely into the sun, a gentlemanly plane. Many runways away, concealed from the human eye, a plane of outcasts slinks off.

DRUG IMMUNE

Jerusalem, (JCNS). - Although the number of drug offenders in Israel has doubled since the 1967 Six-Day War, drug addiction has not "caught on" among Israeli students and is still mainly restricted to society's misfits.

This was stated by Dr. Louis Miller, the director of Israel's mental health services, at the opening here of an international symposium on drug abuse.

Dr. Miller, who spoke on the basis of police reports, attributed the increase in drug offences to cheaper and more easily obtainable supplies and to the arrival of many young visitors from the United States.

He said that while the total of offenders had doubled, to 1,190 between 1966 and 1969, there had been an elevenfold increase from 30 to 345 in the number of non-Israelis in this period.

Before the war most offenders, a high proportion of them Arabs, were born in Israel or elsewhere in the Middle East. In 1969, most offenders were born in the West, with Arabs making up 20 per cent of the total.

HUMAN RELATIONS

RETURN TO COLLEGE

DR. ROSE N. FRANZBLAU

QUESTION.

I have been married 10 years to a fine man. We have three children, and a nice relationship exists in the home, except for one thing. My husband is a small wage earner and we have to struggle to make ends meet. I work at times to earn extra money. He objects, but not too strenuously.

He started college, attended over a long period of time and did very poorly in spite of his intellectual abilities. I am now pressuring him to return to school and finish so he can get a better job. He has taken on additional part-time work. He feels that he would not make a success of school and is reluctant to return. He is trying, nevertheless, to be readmitted.

I don't know if it is worth the sacrifice in the time away from home and the money lost if he fails again. How can I help him to be good at school?

ANSWER

Unfortunately, there are many gifted people who have not been given the gift of self-confidence and assurance and hence operate on a level that is far beneath them. Such psychological inability usually comes from premature, outsized demands and expectations of parents. When parents themselves have not felt fulfilled in their own lives, they will sometimes pressure their child to give them what they never could get for themselves.

The child is placed in conflict. He wants to satisfy the parents' wishes and yet he is resentful of the great demands which they impose upon him. He comes to feel that the parents are more concerned with their own pleasure than with the satisfaction of his needs. Since he judges them to be selfish and self-centred, he does not feel badly when he disappoints them.

In his adult years, this type of grown-up may still act like a little boy in search of himself. He is never quite sure what he wants to do or what kind of career he wants to follow. He may either wander from job to job, or if he holds one job, he may operate on a very mediocre level. To him, it is just a temporary waystation on his journey of self-discovery, which never gets off the ground but which goes on forever.

Although you no doubt appreciate the fine qualities of mind and character that your husband has, there is also no doubt that you are disappointed in what he has thus far been able to accomplish. Perhaps when you fell in love with him, you felt that your love would be sufficient to motivate your husband to do his very best. You may have fancied that you would be able to remake him in your image of what you wanted your husband to be. However, the person to whom such wishes are directed feels prodded and pushed just as he did in his parents' home.

The pressures you are exerting on him make him feel like a child who has to be told what to do. In questioning the soundness of your own educational plan which you project for him, you practically invite failure.

Like everyone else who has not finished the job and achieved his goal, he probably wants very much to return to school and wind up successfully. However, your lack of confidence in him, plus his own fear, makes him hesitate. Unless this atmosphere is changed he may well waver and fail again. A college education is no guarantee of a better job or of being able to hold a good one, if the person is full of insecurities.

It is hard for a person to operate at his best when he feels that his studies are depriving his loved ones, who have to make great sacrifices so that he may find himself. Only the thought that, when he is finished, his family will have more than now and will be compensated for their sacrifice can sustain him and ease his guilt. It does not help when you regard your husband's return to school as a questionable investment, and worry about whether you will ever "get your money back."

Fortunately, it is never too late to clear up the emotional situation which causes such vocational maladjustment and confusion, and to help the person find himself.

Your husband could use some expert vocational advise and guidance. Let him contact the Federation Employment and Guidance Service, at 42 E. 41st St., Manhattan (ORrgon 9-4900). They test the person and then advise and counsel him on the basis of the results. They not only help him to decide what he wants to do but also help to place him. More healthily motivated, he will fulfill himself and do better by himself and for his family.

IT HAS TO BE IN YOU

by Ruthie

How many times have you envied others who take holidays de luxe? By that I mean, not only a holiday, but one where service is at its maximum. Yet, think! Would you really, really like it if you had the opportunity?

I know someone who just returned from a trip where nothing was too good for the pleasure seeker. Limousine doors were open by the mere suggestion of a breath of air; waiters bowed and hostesses curtsied long before the gleam-for-lunch in your eye became apparent; bathtubs were already filled when you entered your hotel room. The only thing left out was a back scratcher.

That, I don't think, is for me. And not because of my middle-class background. I'd have a funny feeling in the pit of my stomach. Sure, you pay for all that. But how do you know you're not snickered at? After all, servants are human. And anyway, your hands and feet are supposed to be more than just appendages.

The last time I indulged in a bit of whimsey, I felt like a dope afterwards.

This was down in the States, in Atlantic City. You're familiar with the carts, those seating two, which are pushed along the boardwalk, from one end to the other and back, by negroes so that you could sightsee in comfort? Well, from childhood I always had the desire to sit in one. To me that was the height of luxury.

The opportunity came during a vacation at that resort. My husband and I were sauntering along the boardwalk one evening when the idea struck me,

"Now's your chance. You live only once."

So we got into a cart which was pushed by a pleasant, burly, colored guide. He was very friendly and pointed out many interesting spots.

However, I sat on edge. I glanced at hubby, he glanced back. We both had the same thought.

"How silly can you get? Two healthy people being pushed in a cart!"

It didn't take long before we decided to put a stop to the whole nonsense. Halfway down the walk, we ordered our pushcart pusher to halt and let us out. Along with the full cost of the ride, we threw in a substantial tip.

It felt good to walk away, feeling that, after all, it was Lincoln who had freed the slaves. We realized we couldn't accept such servitude. It just has to be in you.

Our perplexed guide, however, must have thought we were nuts. He stood there, doubtfully scratching his head. We almost apologized for putting him out of work. Nevertheless the large tip made him happy.

NO MICROPHONES IN BRITISH SYNAGOGUES

London, (JCNS). - The Chief Rabbi, Dr. Immanuel Jakobovits, will not recommend the use of microphones in synagogues in Britain when he returns to London from Israel in September. This is the firm view of the Chief Rabbi's office in London following a telephone call from Chief Rabbi Jakobovits.

Last week, Rabbi M. Unterman, minister of the Marble Arch synagogue, and son of I. J. Unterman, the Ashkenazi Chief Rabbi of Israel, forecast that his father's ruling sanctioning the use of a new amplification system in a synagogue in Johannesburg would be accepted by Chief Rabbi Jakobovits under certain rigidly-defined conditions. But according to Chief Rabbi Unterman, he never intended this system should be used outside of South Africa, and he told Chief Rabbi Jakobovits it was not his intention to allow its use in synagogues in Jerusalem.

An exciting collection of art of the Kibbutzim has been assembled for the annual Art Exhibition and sale at the Associated Hebrew Schools of Toronto, which will open on Saturday evening September nineteenth and run through Monday evening September twenty-first.

It is the first such collection in this city and it comes from the Lim-Kibbutz Art Gallery in Tel Aviv.

ISRAEL CRITICIZES RED CROSS FOR RELEASE OF ARAB TERRORISTS BY GREECE

Jerusalem, (JCNS). - Israel sharply criticized the role of the International Red Cross in the release of seven jailed Arab terrorists by the Greek Government last week.

They were freed in fulfilment of the Greek pledge to six members of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine who hijacked a Greek airliner last month.

The hijackers, who were allowed to leave for Cairo, successfully bargained for the release after threatening to blow up the airliner with its 53 passengers and crew at Athens airport.

In a statement the Knesset's Foreign Affairs and Security Committee expressed astonishment at the part played by the IRC representative, Andre Rochat, in the release of the "criminals who hijacked the (Greek) aircraft and the seven terrorists tried. . .in a Greek court".

ENCOURAGEMENT TO CRIMINALS

His part was "a departure from the humanitarian activities of the IRC organization". The statement also said that the release of the terrorists would provide encouragement for similar criminal acts in future.

Yaacov Caroz, Israel's diplomatic representative in Athens, also protested to Constantine Tranos, the director-general of the Greek Foreign Ministry.

Israel had made repeated representations urging the Greek Government not to comply with the pledge because it had been given under duress, but to no avail.

Two of the freed Arabs were jailed on charges arising from the attack on an El Al airliner at Athens in December, 1968, in which an Israeli passenger was killed, and two more on charges arising from a bomb attack of the El Al office in November, 1969, in which a Greek boy was killed.

The three remaining Arabs were jailed for a bid to hijack a westbound Trans World airliner in December, 1969, after leaving Athens. The airliner had called at Lydda.

ISRAEL MAY ASK FRANCE "TO EXPLAIN PRO-ARAB STATEMENTS"

Paris, (JCNS). - Two remarkable anti-Israeli declarations by French Government officials have recently been reported. The first was by Kosciusko-Morizet, the French representative, who virulently reaffirmed at the United Nations the French stand on the alleged need for the withdrawal of Israeli forces from all occupied territories.

He also reiterated France's wish that all relevant UN resolutions should be implemented, particularly those concerning refugees.

When asked what prompted such a statement, embarrassed French officials here said they had no official comment, noting only that it was a well-known version of the long established French attitude.

But privately, these officials said that the delegate had not received any instructions and he spoke on his own initiative.

"TOTAL EVACUATION"

Later, Jean de Lipkowski, the Secretary of State at the Foreign Ministry, told the Egyptian news agency that there would be no solution to the Middle East problem unless "there was no annexation of territory".

He insisted on total evacuation of the occupied territories and added enthusiastic words about the Arab struggle and Franco-Arab friendship.

These statements were widely splashed in the Egyptian newspapers and on Cairo radio. The broadcast was picked up by Israel's monitoring service.

The Israeli Government is seriously considering asking the French Foreign Ministry to explain these pro-Arab statements in view of repeated French claims that the only way to find a Middle East solution is through the concert of the Big Four Powers, implying some neutrality at least.

"ATROCITY" PICTURES AFTER GREEKS COMPLAIN

Athens, (JCNS). - Many Greeks have been outraged by a display of photographs outside the Egyptian Embassy here purporting to show Arab civilians, including women and children, killed by Israeli aircraft bombing. They complained to Greek officials who claimed that they could not intervene. However, it is believed that the Egyptian Embassy dropped the photographs after several weeks in view of this reaction.

The Embassy put in their place a big picture of Moshe Dayan, the Israeli Defense Minister, and quoted him as saying that Israel would never adhere to the United Nations November, 1967 resolution and would never quit invaded Arab territory.

The Iraqi Embassy has distributed to the Athens press leaflets alleging that the Jews living in Iraq are "very happy" to stay there.
